

Sean Lee
(Investigator)

Sean's practice centers on conducting prompt, impartial, and thorough workplace investigations for private and public sector clients. He handles matters involving discrimination, harassment, retaliation, favoritism, and other workplace misconduct, and approaches each investigation with professionalism, curiosity, and genuine respect for everyone involved. Sean enjoys getting to know the people, workplace cultures, organizational structures, and roles that make each matter unique. He understands that every workplace has its own dynamics, and that taking the time to appreciate that context is essential to evaluating the facts fairly, thoughtfully, and with the care each matter deserves.

Sean brings strong attention to detail, intellectual curiosity, and sincere care to each investigation. He listens closely, asks thoughtful questions, and works to understand not only what occurred, but also the context, decisions, and workplace dynamics that shaped each person's experience. His empathetic and methodical approach helps him identify meaningful details, evaluate differing accounts, and develop well-supported findings. Through clear communication and careful analysis, Sean provides clients with investigations that are balanced, practical, and grounded in the available evidence.

Outside of work, Sean practices muay thai, where he enjoys the discipline, focus, and steady improvement the sport requires.
